ARSENAL

Arsenal, a London football team, and Arsenal fans are called Gunners, (sometimes Gooners) after the gun on their badge. The fans are believed to be the best-educated in the country but they also have the reputation of being a bit boring. Other fans joke that rather than eating the horrible burgers and pies that are the typical food at most football grounds, Gooners eat expensive and healthy sandwiches.

Arsenal fans are generally quieter than other fans, and don't have quite so many songs and chants for supporting their team when they play. This is why rival supporters give the Arsenal ground, Highbury, the nickname 'Highbury the library'.

In fact Arsenal fans' most famous chant is 'Boring, Boring, Arsenal', which was sung by rival fans when Arsenal used to score one goal and defend for the rest of the match. Now Arsenal fans sing 'Boring, Boring, Boring Arsenal' themselves with a degree of irony, as they now play the most stylish football in England.

Arsenal's recent success has seen ticket sales rise and a new generation of fans. However, this success has led to changes that haven't been welcome. The Arsenal team badge was changed last year to a modern simple version. While Arsenal argue that this was to stop unauthentic T-shirts being sold, many believe it was just to make sales bigger. Then Arsenal got a new team sponsor, which appeared on the shirt bigger than ever. The demand for match tickets has also led to Arsenal building a new stadium but, only about 400 metres from the old one!
